Give your program a "parent boost" by learning ways to excite dads to participate. Find out what they need and want from programming and how to fit their suggestions and ideas into your program. Fathers benefit from meeting with other dads when they can share common concerns about their role in parenting and explore ways to become "good enough" parents. Growing children need positive male role-modeling and to provide additional learning perspectives on life and to help build trust in adults.

The training welcomes interactive discussion among agencies to build on creative ideas of servicing dads and their children. You don't want to miss this lively exchange of new insights and program ideas to enhance better parenting by fathers.

Open to the Children's Trust staff and all Children's Programs Funded by the Trust.
